A method was developed for the isolation of a range of linear α,ω -diolefin oligomers from a new hydrocarbon fraction by countercurrent chromatography and preparative thin-layer chromatography. The separation was performed in a single step with only a methanol/hexane mobile phase using a 2:1 gradient system and a preparative countercurrent chromatography instrument equipped with a 250 mL semi-preparative scale. The obtained compound mixture was characterized by GC-MS and ¹H NMR spectroscopy. Structural assignments of the oligomeric products were made based on their characteristic C-H NMR spectra. The method was also applied for the isolation of two bioactive diterpene lactones, i.e. 12-oxo-pimarane-3 β ,12 α ,20 α -triol and 12-oxo-pimarane-3 β ,12 α -diol.Q: How to use "I" with a non-existent noun? For example, if we had a sentence like: I'm tired. I think I want some cake. Would there be a better way to say this? If I'm tired. Is it better to say I feel tired. A: Your sentence doesn't make sense: I'm tired. I think I want some cake. For example, if you have a feeling that you want some cake, then you would be tired, and you wouldn't think you wanted some cake.

What I meant was that some of the tools we create are ours and we can use them to make someone's dream come true. Some of them we create at work. Some at school. Some are with hobbies. Some of the tools we create are ours to keep. Some of them are for work, some for school and some for fun. And the best part is, the dream can be your own. You don't have to dream about what you want to dream about. You can dream about anything you want. But you have to do the work to make it happen. Just thinking about your dream, dreaming about it and wishing it's true, isn't enough. You have to do the work. When you go to school you have to do your homework and study. When you go to work you have to work and make sure you're on time and don't have any mistakes. If you go on a plane you need to learn how to fly the plane. You don't just think about 2d92ce491b
