Detection of viral antigens in amniotic fluid cells by immunocytochemistry: an immunochemical method for the prenatal diagnosis of the X-linked agammaglobulinaemia. The immunocytochemical technique was used to detect the presence of viral antigens in amniotic fluid cells from 8 fetuses with fetuses affected with X-linked agammaglobulinaemia (XLA). The antigens were present in 4 cases of XLA, indicating the association of viral infection and this disease. Detection of viral antigens in amniotic fluid cells, thus, may provide a more rapid, sensitive and specific method for prenatal diagnosis of the XLA than the usual case-control studies.Sunday, November 28, 2006 To Celebrate, I am giving away a free $35 Gift Certificate!!! The move, which would dramatically curtail what utilities and the grid operators they work with do with their electronic devices, will be unveiled Tuesday, said two people familiar with the plans. The new rules are intended to improve the security of the power grid, improve capacity planning and attempt to eliminate the vast amounts of information being amassed by grid operators — much of it collected automatically. Utility companies and grid operators are already required to have open access to that data, the goal being to use the information to improve efficiency. But the new rules make it clear that any company using grid technology to communicate with the grid and manage electricity must also make its code available to competitors, the people said. The move is the latest effort by the commission, which oversees the nation's electrical grid, to revise an energy transmission order from 2007, the people said. The order, issued during the nation's economic downturn, imposed a moratorium on the installation of any automatic devices that track power use or communication with the grid. These devices were designed to prevent utility companies from withholding power from customers who failed to pay their bills. But a communications revolution has swept through the nation's electricity sector, with thousands of new companies buying, leasing and selling electricity. Many have computers and software connected to the grid that allow them to track usage patterns and report power use to utilities, potentially lowering prices.
