Evaluation of a new commercial FSH assay in comparison with FSHR-FSH assay in polycystic ovarian syndrome. To compare the performance of the new (Gonal-F, Serono) and the old (Puregon, Organon) commercial immunofluorescence (IF) assays for the determination of FSH. A total of 245 serum samples from women with PCOS (n=107) and controls (n=138) were included in the study. At the initial screening, 20% of the patients and controls were excluded due to either technical error or non-specific reaction. The overall sensitivities of the new and the old assay for the detection of low, medium and high FSH levels were 95.7%, 93.2% and 95.1%, respectively. The agreement between the two assays was good, with a sensitivity of 98.6% and a kappa value of 0.82. The inter-assay coefficient of variation was 4.8%, 2.8% and 2.6% for low, medium and high levels of FSH, respectively. Both assays were able to detect very low levels of FSH with a good agreement between the new and the old assays. The new assay detected more cases of high FSH and hence diagnosed more patients with PCOS than the old assay. The new assay has a good sensitivity for the determination of serum FSH and could be used in combination with the traditional assays for the diagnosis of PCOS.
