More Doggie Names 1. to the presence of acute renal failure (AKI) in the setting of hyperacute heparin exposure [bb0045], [bb0050]. We could not confirm this association in our study. Neither the rate of AKI nor the number of patients with AKI increased after the last administration of LMWH. There was no difference in the development of AKI between the treatment group and the control group. We believe the phenomenon of false-positive AKI in heparin-exposed patients was not a true renal toxicity. Therefore, we did not consider using heparin-induced thrombocytopenia testing for all patients. The strength of our study is that it is the first study evaluating the utility of LMWH on early pregnancy outcomes in a Korean population. We enrolled a large number of patients and obtained very informative data. Our study has several limitations. First, it is a retrospective study, so its results may not be applicable to all pregnant women. Second, data on LMWH use for different indications or with other concomitant drugs was not included. Third, as a general limitation of the study design, there is no control group in which pregnancy outcomes are compared with those of non-heparin users. Fourth, because we enrolled patients at high risk for thrombosis, we excluded patients who were not eligible for early pregnancy outcomes. Our study suggests that early pregnancy outcomes did not differ between the LMWH and the non-LMWH groups. The differences in the rate of bleeding were more prominent than in early pregnancy outcomes.
