Shaped articles in the form of bottles, e.g. glass bottles, are generally filled with beverages, and the filling operation is most efficiently carried out as bottles being filled come to a complete standstill. In this way, the filling procedure can be carried out at any time at any point along the continuous operation including after the production of the finished bottles. In some installations, the bottles are filled by the second half of a bottle making machine, and following the point of filling, these bottles are conveyed to a point where they are coated with a desired color before they are filled. Such bottles are commonly referred to as coated bottles. Especially when a colored surface layer has been applied to the shaped article during the course of production of the article, care must be taken that the finished article has at least one continuous, uninterrupted colored surface layer which is free from cracks, and/or fissures, and/or inflections so that the appearance of the product is neat and the product shows excellent visual appeal. In order to avoid producing a bottle which is geometrically imperfect so that the appearance thereof is inferior, great care has to be taken that the colored layer is applied in a manner, which renders the shaped article for the most part free from defects so that the shaped article has an appearance not inferior to that of a bottle that has been subjected to a finishing operation. Also, the colored layer must be sufficiently
