The successful man, the successful career woman, the successful mother and the successful wife, each couple in the course is practicing the Sikh Rehat Maryada (personal religious code), including the daily rules of conduct. Maya teaches her students about the Sikh Rehat Maryada. These rules define a certain way of life. By exercising the personal code, the couples will lead a happy life. The story takes place in Toronto, Ontario, Canada. Development The screenplay for "Written on Skin" was inspired by the life of Gurtej Singh Mann, a Canadian Sikh who was a ballroom dancer before switching to a career in law. He was an expert in tax law and has since retired. He was a practicing Sikh until 1981 when he moved to the United States. Cinematic significance In 1993, several Sikh organizations in the United States and Canada filed a complaint against Paramount Pictures, Warner Bros. and Columbia Pictures, charging them with promoting homosexuality and adultery. The filmmakers were accused of "blasphemy and ridicule of the Sikh religion", and promoting "an immoral lifestyle" and "degrading portrayals of Sikhism". The charges were made against "Written on Skin" as well as the 1999 film "Kiss of the Dragon, written by Troma Entertainment and directed by Lloyd Kaufman, and Adam and Steve (2004) written and directed by Mike Myers. The charges were eventually dropped. Reception The film was chosen by the Alliance for Cinema and Freedom of Expression as an award-winning film of 2003. The premiere of "Written on Skin" in Hollywood, California was attended by hundreds of Sikhs. The media's description of the screening includes the phrase "Gurdwara show". Critical Mark Jacobson of The Globe and Mail gave the film a mixed review, stating that although the film had many positive aspects it also had "many problems". He added that despite its flaws, the movie was "a lot of fun". Release Written on Skin was released in both Canada and the United States. Accolades In December 2003, "Written on Skin" won the prestigious Jury Award for best film at the 2003 Ottawa International Film Festival.
