Glycans are also important as drug targets, since many glycan-enzyme interactions have been implicated in a variety of diseases. Therefore, efficient synthesis of glycoconjugates remains an essential task, but is complicated by the difficulty in manipulating the structure of complex glycans. We are developing artificial glycosyltransferases (GGTs) that recognize structural features of glycans and utilize amino acids as donors of glycosyl groups in a manner reminiscent of native glycosyltransferases. GGTs have the potential to revolutionize glycan engineering because they can be programmed to catalyze precise glycosylation patterns with virtually any glycan structure in a combinatorial fashion.

Furthermore, GGTs can be directed to functionalize a wide variety of biomolecules with complex glycans, and even several glycans simultaneously. GGTs are currently being engineered to introduce a wide variety of glycan-specific functionalities into therapeutic glycoproteins and glycosylated polymers, and to more efficiently generate glycans for therapeutic applications.

Glycans found on viral antigens have the potential to serve as important markers of disease and to provide insight into the functions of host proteins that interact with the virus. GGTs will be used to efficiently synthesize simple and complex glycan structures for these and other purposes.Q: Why do some paintings look like they're going in circles? Today I have realized a particular effect of some famous and old paintings. More than one of them look like they're going in circles. Why is this so? Here are the paintings: A: The paintings with the "staircasing" look occur in the atmosphere-mapping section of the exhibition. The artwork seems to show the earth spinning around a stationary sun. The art appears to be abstract, so the artist probably has reasons for the "line-based" appearance. The image appears to consist of some pattern. In particular, it is possible that the artist was inspired by patterns seen on either side of the spinning earth. The more normal-looking paintings are perhaps of different artists and dates.

I tried to connect to a mysql database using phpmyadmin in this server with the function: mysql_connect("192.168.1.200", "root", "") or mysql_connect("192.168.1.200", "root", "", "database") and then with my localhost server it works fine, but on the live server it doesn't. I have already allowed remote connections in the IIS, and here is the error that I got: Warning: mysqli_connect(): (HY000/1045): Access denied for user 'root'@'localhost' (using password: YES) in /var/www/html/Xx/phpinfo.php on line 4 Warning: mysqli_connect(): (HY000/1045): Access denied for user 'root'@'localhost' (using password: YES) in /var/www/html 2d92ce491b
