earlier and more severe atherosclerosis?
A population-based study. Obesity and insulin resistance are thought to cause early atherosclerosis. However, whether they cause atherosclerosis in a sex-specific manner has not been examined. This study was undertaken to examine whether boys, compared with girls, are more likely to have early atherosclerosis after the onset of puberty, defined as the time at which puberty is completed. The study population was composed of 2,546 boys (mean age, 13.1 +/- 2.8 years) and 2,333 girls (mean age, 12.6 +/- 2.8 years) enrolled in the 7th Korean National Health and Nutrition Examination Survey (KNHANES VII-1), a cross-sectional survey of a nationally representative sample of the population. We analyzed the association between overweight, obesity, and insulin resistance and carotid intima-media thickness (IMT), a marker of atherosclerosis, by sex. The prevalence of overweight and obesity was higher in boys than in girls (21.6
