Is this always better, or can a character attack normally at -5 AP with instant speed - or should they attack at normal speed and spread out the damage over 2 rounds? A: Yes, you should be using normal attack time if you want to take advantage of the damage bonuses for high AP and instant speed. Otherwise, it's a straight AP bonus. However, in combination with Instantaneous Hitboxes: You can increase the size of that damage bonus by giving a weapon a Talisman of Rapid Fire. The Talisman of Fast Fire increases the damage bonus from Instantaneous Hitboxes + AP by 5%; however, it does not allow you to attack more than once per attack cycle. The Talisman of Instantaneous Fire increases the damage bonus from AP + Instantaneous Hitboxes by 10%; it grants 2 Attacks per Round instead of 1 Attack for a given attack cycle. A: "Instantaneous attack speed" is just what it sounds like, an attack speed increase in addition to an attack speed bonus. It does not affect whether you move around the hitbox radius, it just allows you to make more attacks more often. You should use whatever is best for the encounter, of course. Sometimes a moving character will want to help the enemy by engaging them in close range and then run away quickly. Other times a character wants to be perfectly predictable to 82138339de
