If you looked at the files history, you could notice that the name was changed from.exe to.ini However, the file is not cracked. To make sure that you can not do this, open the.ini file by hand and see if there is any string of code you can break the protection. If there is, you should contact the author of this program. See here: Also, you should open your windows folder and see if you have a.exe called ini inside. Q: HTML5 WebGL Tooltip with Custom Font I'm trying to implement a tooltip using the HTML5 WebGL viewer, where the tooltip is overlayed over a 3D object on the screen using the texture coordinates of a line segment contained within that object. It works great, but I was wondering if it was possible to use custom fonts. When I try to add custom fonts to the tooltip, the font isn't rendered correctly. For example, I can add the following CSS to make it easier to understand: #tooltip { font-family: "ComicSansMS-Regular"; font-size: 26px; } When I run the following JavaScript (from the WebGL viewer website): var myFont = new go.Font("ComicSansMS-Regular", 26); myFont.name = "ComicSansMS-Regular"; var data = "This is my tooltip!"; var myTexture = new go.Texture("myTexture", myFont); var tooltip = document.getElementById("
