Cornify is a fun way to customize your web browser. Cornify for Chrome: How Does It Work? Cornify for Chrome Features and Benefits: Cornify for Chrome Extension reviews: * Category: Chrome extensionsQ: Timed out waiting for a query to finish in SQL Server I'm trying to run a query in SQL Server 2017 - one that returns a reasonable amount of data. The query takes a while, and at some point I get a "Microsoft SQL Server blocked an attempt to attach a table or view that is requested to be attached." error. I don't really care much about the error, I just want the results. I can run this query a few times, have the timeout error a few times, and it will eventually resolve without any weird problems. I tried to run the query from SSMS, and I get the same result. I tried using the same exact query in SQL Server Management Studio, the same result (the query completes in a fraction of a second in the Management Studio interface). I know that I can probably do something like wait until the query finishes, but I'm trying to avoid that if possible. A: Coding to an error is a common practice for many (most?) error handling, it is not a best practice in all cases. It is considered a best practice in some cases (incomplete error handling), not in others (attempting to handle unexpected errors). It is completely reasonable to handle the error and exit and then retry the operation, if you are willing to wait the timeout. Retry, in fact 09e8f5149f
