Swat 4 Magyar Szinkron Letoltese

A: You need to increase the max_allowed_packet setting in mysql-server.cnf. Run this query: SET GLOBAL max_allowed_packet=512M; and restart mysql-server after this. In this case, you can change it to whatever size you want. A: You can increase max_allowed_packet to arbitrary values in my.cnf: [mysqld] ... max_allowed_packet=128M ... A: From your question I am not clear if you are trying to connect to your database in your application or from your web application. Here are the reasons for both of them to face the same problem. From your web application you are making a request and getting a response. You can try from your web application to connect to your database. You will get the same error. From your web application you are making an ajax request to the database to get a result. You can try from your web application to connect to your database. You will get the same error. To resolve this issue you need to change the max_allowed_packet variable value in the my.cnf file. This variable change is applicable for both of your case. If you are trying to connect from your application to the database, you need to change the max_allowed_packet variable in the my.cnf file. This can be done manually by edit this file in the server folder. Or you can use the server management service tool like you can use the command line to change the max_allowed_packet variable if you are not familiar with the command line. If you are making an ajax request to the database from your web application. In the ajax request you can change the max_allowed_packet value in the query string or the method. $("#querystring").val("max_allowed_packet=128M"); or $.ajax({ url: '/admin/ajax', type: 'post', data: $.param({ "id": "id" }), contentType: 'application/json; charset=utf-8', dataType: 3e33713323
