With current support only featuring Call of Duty: Warzone and Rocket League, more competitive/eSports games such as League of Legends, Apex Legends, Valorant, and others, will be integrated later on. Simply put, while playing a supported game, Hypertrigger has certain triggers that will make it record your gameplay when something important happens, recording only during that instance. As an example, if you score a goal in Rocket League, before the highlight is saved in the app, a confetti visual effect will notify you of the clipping. The built-in AI uses the UI in those games in order to scan for such a highlight, and immediately saves the video. The design is quite simplistic, and it is meant to be a companion app to OBS so using both programs is necessary. Support for a capture card is also available if the user owns one. Likewise, you can also insert a Twitch live recording and the app will clip the highlights, saving them to your storage. Hypertrigger is primarily targeted towards eSports titles, and it also places value on its community, whose requests are a decisive factor in the priority list of to-be-added titles, as well as in developing multiple highlight triggers.
