A Glorious Setting A Glorious Setting is a 1908 theatrical short by the Lumière brothers featuring Lionel Barrymore portraying the narrator. It was the brothers' first feature, and among the first films to use synchronized sound. Synopsis The film begins with a short introduction by the narrator. The film depicts various scenes of a rural setting as it is described in the introduction. At the end of the introduction, the narrator explains that the setting is set in France. The film depicts various scenes in France: a harvesting scene, a farmhouse, a fisherman's wharf, a close-up of a windmill, some French peasants in the countryside, a girl in a flower garden and her dog, two bakers at work, a peasant woman seated under a tree, a young man sitting in a doorway, and a close-up of a woman sleeping in a cottage. The film ends with the narrator describing France's landscape and countryside, while the people in the film are asleep. Production Producer Robert W. Paul originally signed a contract with the Lumière brothers in 1906 for ten years, to film one hundred short films. He quit the

Lumière company after the 1907 short film A Child in Art, causing George Albert Smith to leave his distribution contract for the Lumière company for a rival company, Pathé Frères. In 1909 Paul formed a new company, Paris Motion Picture, which was the precursor of Pathé Frères. Director and narrator The film is directed and narrated by the Lumière brothers. The narrator is Lionel

Barrymore, who appears as both a touring actor and a real estate promoter. Intertitles The film is an example of a silent film that has intertitles. The majority of the film was shot in France and was largely a copy of Paul's early success, A Child in Art (1907) shot the previous summer. A situation to emphasize the setting of the film: Robert W. Paul was a French citizen and wished to promote the film as a French production. The film is set as an art film. All the people in the film are French and the text is in French. References
