A life-size recreation of an undisturbed dry woodland savanna in the paleontological record of the Lake Victoria basin. (Credit: Mark N. Burch)

Paleontologists have built a life-size model of a savanna habitat in the middle of a barren desert, and are putting it on display in a zoo to show what some of our distant ancestors may have seen. The model is the first of its kind for a basin like the Lake Victoria, a body of fresh water that is situated in the centre of East Africa. The habitat, which was constructed to give an approximation of what the environment would have looked like around 8 million years ago, has tiny seedlings growing along the bank. The model, which is in the zoo at Oxford, has been constructed using a laser scanner that can create a 3D model of an animal's skeleton from a fossil. The local
