Fun Photoshop Tricks 1. Convert an image to grayscale Applying the 'Convert to Grayscale' Image Adjustment If you're looking for a quick fix when working with images, then you want to make sure that the color balance is the same across your entire image. As anyone who uses their laptop or desktop computer knows, it is easy to "game" the color balance of an image. Usually all you have to do is change your monitor to a different color temperature. But the best way to fix the color balance of your image is to use the Desaturate or Grayscale adjustment. With the Grayscale adjustment, the color temperature of the image will stay the same no matter where the viewer is located. So, you don't have to worry about how the viewer will view your image after you use this adjustment. If you want to manipulate the color of the image, then this adjustment will work well for you. So, your first step would be to select the 'Convert to Grayscale' Image Adjustment from the Adjustments panel. It looks like there is a small check mark icon next to the Adjustments panel. When you hover over that icon, it will show you that 'convert to grayscale'

Sir, Pleuroparenchymal fibroelastosis (PPFE) is a rare lung disorder characterized by the destruction of subpleural elastic fibers with an increased deposition of collagen and elastin in the parenchyma, especially in the lower lobes. We present a 60-year-old female with bilateral PPFE with an unusual presentation, which to our knowledge has not been previously reported. The patient was an active smoker for 30 years and tobacco cessation was the only form of treatment for her condition. On admission, physical examination of the lungs was unremarkable. Arterial blood gas analysis showed normal values. A chest X-ray showed bilateral fine nodular opacities bilaterally (Figure 1a{ref-type="fig"}) consistent with emphysema. A computed tomography (CT) scan showed similar parenchymal abnormalities and enlarged and displaced left main pulmonary artery (LPA) (Figure 1b{ref-type="fig"}). The diagnosis of PPFE was established on bronchoalveolar lavage that showed increased elastin content (90%) and fibrotic foci (Figure 1c{ref-type="fig"}). The patient was also diagnosed with left and right upper lobe blebs with a normal left and right pleural effusion. The fibrotic appearance was assessed using a tool (imagesXpress[®], Olympus, Japan) that quantifies collagen, elastin, and air to compare baseline and follow-up images. The lungs showed progressive worsening of the fibrotic process from 10% to 50% in 6 months (Figure 1d{ref-type="fig"}). To our knowledge, a smoking cessation therapy for a patient with PPFE is not well established. In our patient, PPFE diagnosis was confirmed, with a clear history of smoking for many years (30 years) with normal lung function and arterial blood gas values. Smoking cessation is the only treatment but its long-term benefits remain unclear. Even if it is possible to prolong life for patients with pulmonary emphysema, their risk of developing lung cancer is high. The fibrotic process was progressive despite a 7-year smoking cessation history. This case report highlights the importance of the bronchoalveolar lavage analysis to diagnose an atypical presentation of PPFE.

What's New In?

(Newser) – Surely not. The AP reports that Air Force leaders are moving forward with a plan to fly huge planes to Cuba, because a few dozen unmanned drones just won't cut it. The new force is to include 20 a/c of about 755,000 pounds, 3.5 times larger than the unmanned Predators flown by the Air Force. The Navy is to lead the experiment, and it's expected to use the first a/c to begin tests in June. And all of this is to celebrate the arrival of a new president, who—gasp—might actually allow our navy to confront the Cubans in their water. What's wrong with drones? Each one is more than $1 million, and the Pentagon admits it's losing $1 billion per year to in-air drone strikes. By contrast, the Cubans only have about $5 billion in their coffers. The only reason to have the drones is so our pilots can occasionally play Battleship.

Q: Dynamically install mod-geoip, nginx & apache2 on Centos 6

This is a combination of 3 questions I have had on my list of unanswered questions. I'm trying to install a site on centos 6 that comes pre-configured for the mod-geoip module, nginx and apache2. I'd like to not install these individually but have yum to do this. I don't know if this is possible. I found that the package geoip-modules-1.4.1-1.el6.x86_64.rpm is available here but when I run yum install geoip-modules-1.4.1-1.el6.x86_64.rpm it says it's going to install the geoip-devel package. I also tried this with the geoip modules, but when I run yum install geoip-modules-1.4.1-1.el6.x86_64.rpm it says it's going to install the geoip-devel package. The modules are the same. I tried to install the other packages from those so I could be sure it was the same packages and not the geoip-modules and geoip-devel packages having the same file name. I've included my listing of what I've been trying.

```
$ sudo yum install geoip-modules-1.4.1-1.
```
