Subarachnoid hemorrhage (SAH) is a severe and life-threatening vascular disease. Thymosin beta 4 (T $\beta$ 4) has been proven to play an important role in the pathogenesis of brain injury in ischemic and hemorrhagic stroke. The present study aimed at investigating the protective effect of T $\beta$ 4 in intracerebral hemorrhage (ICH) rats and potential underlying molecular mechanisms. Male Wistar rats were subjected to ICH by stereotactic infusion of blood into the right striatum. Drug intervention was achieved by intraperitoneal administration of T $\beta$ 4, 5-aminolevulinic acid (5-ALA) and rapamycin. Neurologic deficit and infarct volume were determined 24 h after ICH. Expression of phosphorylated Akt (pAkt) and markers of apoptosis was measured in the peri-hematoma areas. The mRNA level of T $\beta$ 4 was detected in rat brains and cultures of rat primary astrocytes. The protein level of T $\beta$ 4 was measured in both rat and human brains. T $\beta$ 4 treatment significantly improved neurologic deficit and reduced hematoma volume in ICH rats. The protein expression of pAkt was significantly up-regulated in peri-hematoma areas in T $\beta$ 4-treated rats. 5-ALA-enhanced pAkt was also higher in T $\beta$ 4-treated rats than that in ICH rats. Furthermore, T $\beta$ 4 treatment resulted in significant suppression of Bax, cleaved caspase-3, and cleaved caspase-9. Under T $\beta$ 4 treatment, the expression of T $\beta$ 4 and pAkt was significantly elevated in both rat brain tissue and primary astrocytes. All of these findings suggested that T $\beta$ 4 treatment might inhibit apoptosis via activating the Akt signaling pathway. T $\beta$ 4 administration might be a promising candidate for the prevention of the brain injury and degeneration in ICH. Contents J. C. Fay was born in Columbus, New York in 1823.
