Note The free options for both Photoshop and Photoshop Elements are too limited to be recommended for serious work. Photoshop will require a monthly subscription for the newer versions, and Photoshop Elements is totally free to use. # Color Modes and Color Management The most basic way to manipulate a color image is to use color mode tools and channels. With a single selection or adjustment layer, you can change the color mode of a specific area of an image. You can also move color from one place to another, or change the brightness or contrast of an image. The color mode in an image is simply the way the colors appear after being captured, when the camera or scanner creates the image file. The photos appear as they were when they were taken: as a choice of color or grayscale images. When you photograph an object, or an area of an image, it may take on a color cast that is wrong for the scene. For example, if the sky turns pink in a photo, the sunset may seem unnatural. Conversely, if the sky is too gray, the colors in an image may appear flat and washed out. The look of the image can be improved with a little extra work in post-processing. To do so, you can select individual colors from one part of an image and move them to another—maybe the sky, a bridge, or the water in your photo—making them appear more natural. This might save a lot of time if you have lots of different colors that need to be changed. The color mode controls are in the options bar (Figure 7-3 and the color channels \(\backslash(b)\)."). To control the color in an image, you need to select one of three modes: Figure 7-3. This file has four color channels, but Photoshop Elements automatically creates a fifth. These are the pixels for the new channel. You can see the previous four in the color channels \(\backslash(b)\).)

What's New in the Photoshop 7.0 Adobe Photoshop Download?

Q: Loop through array and delete multiple words and their associated values I have an array of arrays like this: [ ["user-1", "2"], ["user-1", "2", "2"], ["user-2", "1"], ["user-2", "1"], ["user-2", "1", "1"] ] Each array contains a set of values and strings. The string is just a user name and the numbers are attempts from them. I have run a search for words that appear multiple times in the strings. What I want to do is get the strings, then delete all the multiple occurrences of each word, and then count the number of attempts associated with them. How can I do this? A: If your arrays are always the same length, and the words are the same length as well, it's fairly easy. Define a function that checks if the current array contains the word, and if so, deletes the word and all the values it appears in. Then, just loop through the result you get in the callback function. arrays = [ ["user-1", "2"], ["user-1", "2", "2"], ["user-2", "1"], ["user-2", "1"], ["user-2", "1", "1"] ]

function nested_array_remove_pattern(arr, pattern) { for (var i = 0, len = arr.length; i < len; i++) { if (arr[i].indexOf(pattern) > -1) { arr.splice(i, 1); i--; } } }
