The new gameplay features will be playable in the online demo of FIFA 22, and on FIFA.com, during EA SPORTS™ Football Club™ from September 4 - 6. HyperMotion Technology will debut in one of the 22 teams in FIFA 22. In FIFA 22, the team captain can control several of the characters on the field. Tackles and headers will move the virtual player in accordance with where the tackle and header is delivered. A player can use gestures, including the traditional “cleaning” motion, to control their players. Players can also use their physical prowess to sprint, accelerate, and perform more powerful headers than they could before. New Controls The biggest change in FIFA 22 is the new control system. At the heart of this new control scheme are several new features that revolve around refined ball control and the new contextual touchline controls. Full touchline controls Refined Ball Control The ball control in FIFA is more refined for a number of reasons. The first is that FIFA features more intelligent passing animations. A technical reviewer compared the animation to a car, “You want to feel that the player is carrying momentum and being controlled by his momentum” says Mark Tanner, Product Director at FIFA. Add to that the fact that in FIFA 22, there are more realistic physics-based passes. Some of the passes in FIFA 22 are more lifelike than before. Exact angles, momentum and spin can be applied when passing the ball. The second benefit to a more refined ball control is that while you are making passes, you can also expect the ball to make realistic movements. This has three main benefits for gameplay. The first is that the ball moves through the air better in FIFA 22. As a result, a ball that has been hit hard can have more bounce and carry when being controlled. The second is that if the defender stands in your way, or there is no space, then you can set up a better chance of a shot or shot-blocker. And finally, there is better crowd-pleasing goal-scoring. With all of this in mind, the ball will react to a sliding tackle like a balloon would - it will rise. The third reason that the ball’s movements are more realistic than before is that it now reacts to your pace of play, and whether you are pressing forward, stopping the ball or slowing down the game. When you
