In a known two-cycle engine of this type (German Offenlegungsschrift No. 12 15 683), the crankshaft is provided with a primary pinion gear which meshes with a flywheel gear of the flywheel and is on the side on which the rotor-piston combination is on the camshaft. A one-armed toothed gear engages on the secondary pinion gear of the crankshaft and is located on the side of the crankshaft with the rotor-piston combination. These gears thus connect the crankshaft directly with the camshaft. On the camshaft itself, a gear is provided which engages in a planet wheel carrier which carries the planet wheel. German Offenlegungsschrift No. 12 15 683 discloses other two-cycle engines in which the outer contour of the flywheel is formed with a hollow tube which runs over an arcuate, annular seat. In these known engines, the crankshaft is in driving connection with the camshaft via a toothed belt. In this known arrangement, the camshaft is provided with a first toothed belt which engages with the flywheel gear directly. From this flywheel gear, a second belt engages which engages a planet wheel. The planet wheel engages in the hollow center of the flywheel. In order to achieve a large effective transmission ratio with such an arrangement, the diameter of the crankshaft is comparatively large, and the length of its journal region is comparatively long. For this reason, a comparatively large space is required in the region of the crankshaft
